

GIVING YOUNG PEOPLE A CAREER KICKSTART

We're honoured to be able to help young people find their feet in the food business, and we're so proud of the accomplishments of all our apprentices.

JOSH

Now an engineering technician, 24-year-old Josh was so keen to get started with Müller he moved 320 miles from North Yorkshire to Somerset to take on his engineering apprenticeship.

"I've learned so many great engineering skills while working for Müller," says Josh. "I get a great deal of satisfaction knowing I've repaired or kept an important machine running thanks to the knowledge I've gained here."

During his apprenticeship, Josh was involved in numerous projects across the site, and had the opportunity to get many additional qualifications: "I've achieved great results, both practically and academically." However, Josh says the big takeaway for him has been the people. "Everyone on site from production operatives all the way up to the senior leadership team was really friendly and couldn't do enough to support me," he says. "I could always rely on my colleagues here – it almost feels like a family."

HOLLY

Holly had always wanted a career in food, so she jumped at the opportunity to take part in Müller's dairy technology apprenticeship programme. "I've learned about the whole process, from the farm to the production, to the product on the shelf," she says. "I really enjoyed a stint in the process team learning how to actually make yogurt!"

Twenty-three-year-old Holly spent four years on the programme working in different departments, learning while earning and making "friends for life" along the way. "I've met so many people from different sites with different backgrounds who have all been so happy to share their knowledge with me," she says. Now she works in Müller's quality team. "It's the role I wanted from the beginning; I hope I can give back to Müller what it's given to me!"

WILL

Will says he knew from the outset that university wasn't for him. "I just wanted to get the best out of what I can do, so I knew a Müller apprenticeship would be a good fit for me."

Currently part of the technical apprenticeship programme, 20-year-old Will is spending time with different departments across the business. "Every day is different. I'm always learning, always meeting new people – I've learned so much in such a short amount of time, and everyone wants to help."

Will's excited about how many opportunities there are at Müller, although he hopes to end up in the production side of things once he finishes his apprenticeship. "I'm just proud to be part of Müller," he says. "It's a household name – everyone I know has Müller products in their fridge!"
